Food and fluids should ALWAYS be offered by mouth if feasible and desired by the patient.

Artificial Nutrition

Patients may choose between three options related to artificial nutrition:

- Long-term artificial nutrition or feeding tube. Studies have shown that for individuals with late stage dementia or advanced terminal diseases, pneumonia and pressure ulcers are not prevented with tube feeding.
- Artificial nutrition/feeding tube trial. For a trial period of artificial nutrition, including feeding tube specify the maximum duration in the “Other Instructions” space. Also, artificial nutrition includes Total Parenteral Nutrition, or TPN.
- No artificial nutrition or feeding tube.

Patients should understand that near the end of life the body may not be able to process foods and fluids. Instead of helping, they may create more discomfort or complications. Consider discussing bowel impactions and aspiration or other complications that may result from these treatments at the end of life.
